Brief History

The South Asia Union Catalogue, a component of the Digital South Asia Library, is a bibliography of books and periodicals published in South Asia from 1556 through the present. In 1993 the Sahitya Akademi (New Delhi, India) undertook a pilot project for a Catalogue of Nineteenth-Century Indian Publications. This project was critically important for planning the South Asia Union Catalogue.

Scope and Coverage

The South Asia Union Catalogue is a project for gathering existing bibliographic records and adding them with new cataloguing records in the South Asian subcontinent. In addition, it becomes a union catalogue in which libraries throughout the world owning copies of those imprints will register their holdings. The South Asia Union Catalogue program are defined into four phases by the regions of book production. Phase I includes south India and Sri Lanka. Here publications are in Dravidian languages plus Sinhala, an Indo-Aryan language etc. Phase II covers eastern South Asia and colonial Burma. Here most publications are in eastern Indo-Aryan, Tibeto-Burman, and Austro-Asiatic languages. Phase III covers north central South Asia, including Nepal. Here the majority of publications are central Indo-Aryan and the most frequently occurring languages of imprints are Nepali, Marathi, Gujarati, and Hindi with its dialects. Phase IV includes over western South Asia and includes Afghanistan, Pakistan, and parts of northwestern India. Languages of the region include several from the western and eastern Indo-Iranian and western Indo-Aryan families. Most of those languages use the Perso-Arabic script.
