Supply Chain News: Still High Flying Times in US Distribution Center Space Market

Vacancies Down to 17 Year Low, JLL Report Finds, Even as New Construction Continues at Rapid Pace

April 24, 2017

SCDigest Editorial Staff

It has been a pretty wild ride for US warehouse and distribution center space for several years, driven by the relentless rise of ecommerce and related fulfillment needs.

In January, for example, warehouse space owner Prologis reported that occupancy rates at its facilities hit an incredible 97.1% in the fourth quarter of 2016 - an all-time high. Prologis saw rents in the U.S. jump by more than 23% year over year, the company said, with global rates increasing by 16%.

Real estate firm CBRE reported similar news at the time, saying in urban areas such as Los Angeles and Seattle less than 5% of total warehouse capacity is available for leasing, sending rates soaring.

But there were signs the market might be slowing down, in good news for shippers. For example, Prologis CEO Hamid Moghadam said in January that "We are getting into the more mature part of the cycle. It's more of a balanced market, with modest rental growth."
