Archives Photograph Collection

The Indiana University Office of University Archives and Records Management holds a vast photograph and negative collection that comprises approximately two-million images. The majority of these were shot by Indiana University's Photographic Services Department, Athletic Department, and News Bureau. The remaining images were shot mostly by local professional photographers, alumni, and faculty. Nearly all of the images document the history of Indiana University. For more information, and links to other notable collections within the Archives click here.

Scope and Coverage

It covers the images of the City of Bloomington, the State of Indiana, the United States, and other parts of the world.

Kind of Information

The Indiana University Office of University Archives and Records Management holds a vast photograph and negative collection that comprises approximately two-million images. The majority of these were shot by Indiana University's Photographic Services Department, Athletic Department, and News Bureau. The remaining images were shot mostly by local professional photographers, alumni, and faculty.

The Indiana University Archives has also made great efforts to collect the personal portfolios of other notable photographers that have connections to Indiana University. These include Charles W. Cushman, Will Counts, and Benjamin W. Douglass. Through these collections and those of other photographers, including alumni and faculty do they have images of the City of Bloomington, the State of Indiana, the United States, and other parts of the world.

Special Features
