Brief History

The CDNC was officially launched in 2007

Scope and Coverage It contains millions of pages, ranging from the first publication in 1846 to contemporary issues.

Kind of Information The California Digital Newspaper Collection (CDNC) is a freely-available archive of digitized California newspapers, accessible at the project's web site. The project is part of the Center for Bibliographical Studies and Research at the University of California Riverside.

This collection contains 199,710 issues comprising 2,098,165 pages and 17,528,718 articles.

The CDNC follows standards established by NDNF. Microfilm or newsprint is scanned to create TIFF images. Whenever possible master negative film is used. The CBSR manages an archive of roughly 100,000 reels of negative film, the California Newspaper Microfilm Archive. When negative film isn't available positive can be used, but image quality and OCR will not be as good.

Special Features

- ❖ The CDNC has traditionally digitized to article-level rather than just page-level. Individual "segments" on a page — articles, illustrations, advertisements, etc. are identified during digitization and can be retrieved by the researcher.
- ❖ Recently the CDNC has begun digitizing some titles to page-level, but most are still article-level. The main advantage of page-level is lower cost when done in an automated fashion, without human input.
- ❖ There is a search bar where simple and advanced search can be possible
